While there is mounting scientific evidence as to the effectiveness of the above treatments, much of the evidence is anecdotal (based on case-by-case reports). Some of the treatments have been used for centuries (even thousands of years) in China, while other treatments have been developed recently, and shared amongst highly reputable and degreed practitioners in the fields of veterinary medicine, botanical medicine (herbs), naturopathic medicine, Chinese herbs and natural supplements and physical therapy. While the treatments are to the best of our knowledge safe and frequently effective many do not have scientific studies done regarding their efficacy or long-term safety.
